The invention relates to a method and a device for selecting and dimensioning measures in case of instability electrical power system. In the method, according to claim 1, the actual voltage/phase angle is determined, the power unbalance is determined, appropriate power balancing measures are determined, the extent of every measure is dimensioned and the measures are accomplished. There also is a corresponding device defined in claim 23. Claims 1 and 23 are quite vaque; stated how, or even that, the power balancing is not measures are determined from the voltage/phase angle and power unbalance. Moreover, in the expression "voltage/phase angle" it is not clear whether the "/" stands for "or", for "and" or both. Anyhow, document D1 discloses a system for selecting and dimensioning measures for avoiding a collapse in an electric power system (see col. 7, lines 14-36). Voltages, phase angles and powers are determined (see for example col. 23, lines 6-20) and appropriate measures are taken. The invention defined in claims 1 and 23 is not clearly distinguishable from the art disclosed in document D1.

The remaining claims define trivial applications of well-known electrical measuring practice and emergency actions in power systems.

Document D2 describes the general state of the art.

To summarize, claims 1 and 23 lack novelty and the remaining claims lack an inventive step. The invention is industrially applicable.
